

Billroth cord

Billroth cord is a tissue located between the sinuses of the red pulp of the spleen. It is formed by a network of reticular cells and reticular fibers, in the eyes of which sit a large number of macrophages, B-lymphocytes, lymphocytes, granulocytes and dendritic cells.

Links

Related articles

- Spleen (preparation)
- Spleen

Bibliography

- LÜLLMANN-RAUCH, Renate. Histologie. 1. edition. Praha : Grada, 2012. ISBN 978-80-247-3729-4.
- MESCHER, Anthony L – JUNQUEIRA, Luiz Carlos Uchôa. Junqueira's Basic Histology. 12. edition. United States : McGraw-Hill Education - Europe, 2009. 480 pp. ISBN 9780071630207.