

Sézary disease

Sézary disease is a leukemic form of Mycosis fungoides with concomitant erythroderma, generalized lymphadenopathy and hepatosplenomegaly. Clinically, there is red-purple discoloration of the skin, scaling of the entire skin to loss of nails and alopecia, and persistent pruritus.

Links

Related articles

- Erythroderma

Literature used

- ŠTORK, Jiří. Dermatovenerologie. 1. edition. Galén, Karolinum, 2008. 502 pp. ISBN 978-80-7262-371-6.

Sézary disease